Rising Ocean Levels

The global ocean covers 71% of the Earth’s surface and contains around 97% of the Earth’s water. Even a small change in ocean levels—for example, from rapidly melting ice sheets—can have a significant impact. For more on how photonics is being used to track global environmental change, see this month’s cover story (p. 24).

Background image: Getty Images / Infographic: Alessia Kirkland